FRIDA KAHLO
PAINTER

Once upon a time, in a bright blue house near Mexico City, lived a small girl called Frida. She would grow up to be one of the most famous painters of the twentieth century, but she almost didn't grow up at all.

When she was six, she nearly died from polio. The disease left her with a permanent limp, but that didn't stop her from playing, swimming, and eating just like all the other kids.

Then, when she was eighteen, she was involved in a terrible bus accident. She almost died again—and again she spent months in bed. Her mother made her a special easel so that she could paint while lying down, for more than anything else, Frida loved to paint.

As soon as she was able to walk again, she went to see Mexico's most famous artist, Diego Rivera. "Do my paintings any good?" she asked him. Her paintings were amazing—bold, bright, and beautiful. He fell in love with them—and he fell in love with Frida.

Diego and Frida got married. He was a big man in a large floppy hat. She looked very beside him. People called them "the elephant and the dove."

Frida painted hundreds of beautiful self-portraits during her life, often surrounded with the animals and birds that she loved. The bright blue house where she lived has been kept just as she left it, full of color and joy and flowers.
